The 30th Nebula Award celebration is a respectable years best and report on the genre, somehow fails to strike sparks. Editor Sargent includes a lot: all the short-fiction winners and nominated short stories; a section of the winning novel, Greg Bears Moving Mars; a story by the Grand Master winner, Damon Knight (founder of the Science Fiction Writers of America, which awards the Nebulas); the Rhysling Award winners for best SF poetry, articles on the state of the genre and SF movies; and a tribute to Robert Bloch. The best pieces are Ursula K. Le Guins runner-up novelette, The Matter of Seggri, an insightful sketch of sex roles in an alien culture; Martha Soukups winning short story, the bitterly memorable A Defense of the Social Contracts; and David Gerrolds winning novelette, The Martian Child, a charming tale of adoption that goes on a bit too long. Mike Resnicks winning novella, Seven Views of Olduvai Gorge, also a Hugo winner, suffers from fakey aliens and hoodoo science. The other short stories, by Maureen McHugh, Knight, Ben Bova, Barry Malzberg and Kate Wilhelm, are accomplished but flawed. Joe Haldemans Hugo-winning None So Blind is the best of the lot. Perhaps the recent, previous publication of most of these pieces has robbed the collections thunder; while worthwhile, even impressive at times, its more commendable than exciting.
