Gibbs Contributors: Jordan Smith lives in the Pacific Northwest, a setting he enjoys using as an inspiration for horror stories that take place in the wilderness. The tedium of his day job allows his imagination to break free of banality and explore concepts in writing that would otherwise not exist in the real world. He is also a skilled visual artist. When Dreams Become Nightmares is the web presence of award-winning author Lee Pletzers. With five novels, two novellas, and over seventy short stories sold since 2001, he has made an impact on the genre world and thrives within its limitless boundaries. Although he is a lover of the indie scene, Mr. Pletzers is searching for the golden egg and as such he still sends his books out to independent and legacy publishers (and agents), looking for that elusive million-dollar check. P. D. Dawson has had stories published with Almond Press & Schlock Magazine, and will soon be featured in the July 2015 issue of Beyond Imagination Literary Magazine. He also has a flash fiction piece that ranked in the top 20, which will be published in the summer by Earlyworks Press. He is currently also working on his first novel in the vampire genre. You can follow his writing successes and regular updates at his website, www.pddawson.com. Dian Gansen has written stories and novels since the dawn of time, that is, since she can remember. While most of her horror, science fiction, and fantasy stories have been written for her own amusement, she has published short stories in the magazines Aeofes Kiss and Conceit Magazine, both in 2012. Her characters live in her head, but she would like you to know some of them. Fueled by imagination and the search for the unknown, David J. Gibbs looks for the lost threads of stories wherever they might be. A web designer by day and a superhero rock star by night, he is constantly writing and seeking the next thread to feed his addiction. His work has appeared in Under The Bed, New Realm, Aphelion, and Nebula Rift. He has also published two collections of short speculative fiction, A Taste of the Grave and Once, Twice, Thrice as well as a novel titled The Walking Man. More info at <http://www.davidjgibbs.com>.
