Not illustrated. 1911 Excerpt: ...affections, and strengthens our wills, who guides us in our perplexity, encourages us to assume tasks too great for our unaided powers, and, when we have fallen, lifts us up and gives us heart to begin our life afresh. We know him as our Comrade and Commander; whose service we have entered, whose appointment we have accepted, whose mission is our whole ambition, whose approving love it is our highest wish to win. He is to us the end of our hopes, the fulfillment of our aims, the secret of our life. Hope in him gives us assurance of the final issue. We are working not only for him, but with him, and our faith in him gives us faith in ourselves and in our future. We cannot fail, because out of our failures he will bring success. We cannot be disappointed, because the disappointment which he appoints for us fulfills our ambition. We shall have sorrows; but we can never be sorrow////, because to suffer for him is our joy, and sorrows which come in his service are joy-bringing sorrows. We cannot be lonely, because our highest and best companionship is in our hours of solitude. When we cannot mount up on eagle wings, we can run and not be weary; when we cannot run for weariness, we can walk and not faint. Even injustice suffered from the cowardice or the cruelty of men loses its bitterness, for we remember that when the treacherous Judas, the cruel Caiaphas. and the cowardly Pilate combined to send our Master to the cross, he said: The cup which my Father giveth me, shall I not drink of it? The littlest service, the most tiresome drudgery, become part of a great enterprise, and defeat is transformed into victory. Though the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain, we know that all things work together for good, and we are in all things conquero...
