

Only Believe

In Fear Not, Linda Horton's third, highly praised novel based on a true story, we rooted for Carolee Cameron, a California insurance investigator and single mother of two, as she was targeted by the East Coast good ol boys network who took over the insurance company for which Carolee, for five long years had gone far above and beyond the call of duty. The constant corporate attacks took a huge toll on Carolee's physical, mental, and emotional health until she finally decided to fight back. Per doctors orders she resigned her position but was determined the Chicago-style thugs would not get away with those tactics. In Only Believe, we return to Central California months after Carolee's resignation, in time for the legal battle. Carolee has conquered the severe panic/anxiety disorder which was brought on by the Executives constant harassment and sabotage. Smack-dab in the middle of this corporate battle she's notified that her father has died under suspicious circumstances at his home in Texas. Then she discovers that Travis, her drug and alcohol addicted brother, was living with her father at the time of death and he has, just three days later, produced a notarized Will, allegedly signed two nights before their father's death. The Will gives Travis sole ownership of their father's hundred acres and personal possessions. But, her father's neighbors and the Emergency Room Doctor at the time of death advise Carolee her father would not have been in any condition to know what he was doing on the date that document was signed. Is it murder? Can she prove it? And how will she deal with this added stress and looming battle while fighting the slick corporate attorneys from CC &C?
