

New and Selected Poems

Dominic Alapat's three books contain some of the most unusual poems that I've read in a long time - unusual in the sense that while practically all city-based poets focus on the damaging, destructive side of city life, Alapat thrives on its joys. This is not to say that Alapat deliberately avoids the darkness both Mumbai and his own demons can sometimes bring. When it comes upon him it has a terrible presence, almost equal to the disturbing, often ecstatic joys that make his poems so unusual. Adil Jussawalla, lulu.com

[Dominic] Alapat revels in the magic of moments [he] lives so much more in every moment, forcing you the reader- too to experience the sobriety of simplicity. Rochelle Potkar, lulu.com

To read Dominic Alapat's poems is to immerse oneself in the many hidden lives of the people and places that come together to create Bombay. [He] has a knack of eliminating himself from the proceedings, of becoming a fly on the wall, of straddling his own public and private life here, and exposing them both in poetry that is sometimes playful, often deceptively simple, and almost always moving. This is an unusual, interesting collection from a poet who deserves a much wider audience. Lindsay Pereira, Midday

Dominic Alapat is the author of three ebooks of poetry; Reeling (2012), Circling the Sky (2013) and The Branches (2015), all published on www.lulu.com. His poems have appeared in Nthposition, Kavya Bharati, Nether and Big Bridge. He lives in Mumbai where he is a freelance writer and editor. This collection has 114 poems selected from the poet's previous three ebooks and new poems.
