

Soulscape

When he was a child, Arnold Norach died and returned. Thirty years later, all that remained were fragmented memories of the horror but memories are pieces of life, therefore, pieces of the soul. The young Arnolds soul was entwined with that of his killer, something he is unaware of until he dies again. In an accident, he dies with his wife and crosses again beyond the veil between life and death. He learns that this place is not at all like the visions of paradise or torment he had been taught. And he brings someone back.
