

Stone Morgan created the Chip to save others from the terrible grief that plagued him after his three-year-old son was kidnapped thirty years ago. For years these tracking implants have brought peace of mind to families all over America. Being Chipped has become the norm for most people, however not everyone is convinced it is the solution. When a gunman bursts through the doors of Stone Enterprises, cradling his arm where he extricated his Chip, Meg Cameron is more convinced than ever that she has made the right choice for her and her son not to be Chipped. A pandemic strikes and the only hope for immunity is the Chip. Meg realizes they no longer have the freedom of going without the Chip if they want to survive. With the help of Jake Roberts, a new recruit to Stone Enterprises, Meg and a New York Times reporter, discover the Chips have an undisclosed function. They question if Stone Morgan is really the savior he is made out to be, but for millions it may be too late.
