I scorn (quoth she), thou coxcomb silly (Clapping her hand upon her breech, 815 To show how much she prizd his speech), Quarter or counsel from a foe; If thou canst force me to it, do: But lest it should again be sed, When I have once more won thy head, 820 I took thee napping, unprepard, Arm, and betake thee to thy guard. This said, she to her tackle fell, And on the Knight let fall a peal Of blows so fierce, and pressd so home, tu That he retird, and followds bum. Stand tot, quoth she, or yield to mercy; It is not fighting arsie-versie Shall serve thy turn.--This stirrd his spleen More than the danger he was in, 830 The blows he felt or was to feel, Although th already made him reel. Honour, despite, revenge, and shame, At once into his stomach came; Which fird it so, he raisd his arm s3e Above his head and rained a storm Of blows so terrible and thick, As if he meant to hash her quick. But she upon her truncheon took them, And by oblique diversion broke them, 840 Waiting an opportunity To pay all back withusury, Which long she faild not of; for now Vol. 1. 12 The Knight with one dead-doing blow Resolving to decide the fight, 845 And she with quick and cunning sleight Avoiding it, the force and weight He chargd upon it was so great As almost swayd him to the ground. No sooner she th advantage found, 860 But in she flew; and, seconding With home-made thrust the heavy swing, She laid him flat upon his side, And, mounting on his trunk astride, Quoth she, I told thee what would come
