

Cascade Point and Other Stories

A selection of short stories based on a science fiction theme. This book is highly recommended and it is a complete shame that it's out of print. The Giftie Gie Us is about a post-apocalyptic world where justice is won the hard way and love is even harder to find. The Dreamsender is a story about a possible future where very special people can go into others' dreams and send messages, or just talk to them. Dreamsending doesn't seem to have anything to do with time and space...meaning that a person can just as easily send messages across the galaxy as they can to their next-door neighbor. So when a conspiracy happens on the moon and men seem to be kidnapped, how do they get messages in and out of their prison? The Energy Crisis of 2215 is about humanity needing more energy for the earth. They capture a black hole to fulfill this requirement. What they don't know is the black hole is unstable and sitting right next to the earth. Return to the Fold is about a person that has been conditioned since birth to want to be away from other people. Not only can he not stand being in the same room as someone else, he can't stand being in a room someone else was in. This works well on space voyages lasting twenty or thirty years, but horrible when a person wants to be like everyone else. What is he to do? The Shadows of Evening is about humans colonizing another planet and an indigenous life form that doesn't like technology. This life form encircles anything technological and tries to get rid of any people around it. There is a special group of men that can get rid of these shadows and have been doing it for generations. When a new, easier way is found to rid the world of shadows, these highly trained, highly respected Shadow Warriors are no longer needed. These men start to resent the newly trained Mindmasters. Not Always To The Strong is the sequel to The Shadows of Evening.

In this story a rich man wants to control the newly made Mindmasters. To do this
