Not illustrated. 1856 edition. Excerpt: ...But all is vanishd from my death-struck eye. Farewell to all the scenes of earth beneath: I go to share tli unmingled bliss on high,1--When this was utterd with her failing breath, Wunnisoo closd her eyes in peacefulness of death. 41. The visions of a dying saint are true. Death will but lead to life of endless years, The grave to heavn, where joy is ever new. Then wherefore do wo shed the bitter tears, As friend of Jesus sinks and disappears? Think you, that eye will neer again unclose, Nor sound eer pierce the portals of those ears? Think you, those lips will neer the thought disclose, And that the marble frame neer wakes from long 1 repose? 42. The many-footed caterpillar creeps His destind period slow along the ground, Then weaves his web, in which he dies, and sleeps, While northern streams in icy chains are bound: But when the spring returns, and merry sound Of songsters fills the grove with melody, He bursts the cerements, that had wrappd him.round, And comes forth in a form, that charms the eye, To float aloft in air a gilded butterfly. 43. And shall then man, more noble than a worm, Created, like the worm, by powr of God, Neer feel the influence, that shall change his form, But always sleep beneath the valleys clod? Shame on the doubt: it should receive the rod Of sharp rebuke in him, who well descries, How life springs up from evry vernal sod, And beauty rises, where corruption lies,--All nature teeming with still deeper mysteries. 44. What reason must admit, by faith is known; And faith is reasons trust in word divine. On dead mans tomb once lay a sealed stone, While Roman guard stood watching in a line;--Vain toil that side-piercd sleeper to confine I For lo, the warders tremble in despair, For earthquake shook the...
